FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

- Year-to-date, Gold has experienced a remarkable year, achieved over 50 all-time highs and returned over 60% in USD term. Gold prices surged 5.4% in November, supported by expectations of US interest rate cuts, robust central bank demand, and ongoing geopolitical risks, though some regional demand like Chinese jewelry softened.
- Anticipation of further US Federal Reserve rate cuts boosted gold's appeal as a safe haven and alternative to lower-yielding bonds, making gold be seen attractive to investors.
- Gold has surpassed key psychological levels of $4,000 per ounce, though volatility led to pullbacks before ending the month strong. Continued sideways movement was seen as positive, allowing markets to absorb higher prices.
- The bullish trend remains intact. The holiday season might see reduced volatility and some profit-taking. Some institutions are expected gold prices to consolidate near the current levels, fluctuating between $4,140 and $4,310 per ounce.
- However, the unexpectedly strong US economic data or a sudden resolution of geopolitical tensions could lead to a deeper correction, potentially testing the support level around $4,000 per ounce.
